

3. What event or action is this photograph capturing? What in the photo tells you this?

4. Are the activities that you see in the photo similar to other activities you have seen in other places or other cultures around the world? In what ways?

5. If you think the activities in the photo are similar to those in other places or cultures of the world, how do you think they got to the place pictured in the photograph?

6. What are two things you could infer from this photograph?

Eric is a graduate of Appalachian State University with a BS in history-secondary education, and he achieved his National Board Certification in 2002 in the area of Early Adolescent/Social Studies-History. He has been a member of the Educational Advisory Committee for the North Carolina Museum of History. He has presented at the North Carolina Council for the Social Studies and North Carolina Middle School Association conferences for several years, on topics such as using hands-on activities in the social studies classroom and using document-based questions and photo/document analysis with students. He has also worked with the North Carolina State Humanities Extension textbook series Living in Our World as well as the new social studies textbook series North Carolina Journeys for Gibbs-Smith, Publisher.

Eric enjoys reenacting the lifeways of the Revolutionary War period, researching family history, antiques, gardening, and camping with his wife and son.